PASTOR SENTENCED

STAPLETON — A former Ringgold pastor will spend four to five years in prison for two felony sexual assault charges.

District Judge John Murphy sentenced 44-year-old Mark Christopher Thursday.

Christopher had pleaded no contest in September to one charge in Logan County and the other in McPherson County.

Prosecutors alleged Christopher had sexual contact with two girls younger than 14 and 16 between December of 1997 and March of 1998.

Christopher had served as the minister of the Ringgold Free Methodist Church, but has resigned.

DROWNING CASE

KEARNEY — An Omaha woman must spend a week in jail for buying beer for a University of Nebraska at Kearney football player who drowned in a sandpit near Kearney in May.

Brandie Vogel, 22, began her sentence Wednesday for providing beer for Tarence Lymon on May 6.

That day, Lymon, a redshirt freshman football player at UNK, was at a party with about 75 other students when he tried to swim across a sandpit and drowned. His death was ruled an accidental drowning.

Vogel also was placed on one-year probation and must complete alcohol education classes.

UNINTENDED

DEMOLITION

OMAHA — An Omaha businessman has filed a lawsuit against the city of Omaha over the unintended destruction of his downtown banquet hall during demolition of a building next door.

Frankie Pane is seeking unspecified damages from the city and its contractor — Dore and Associates of Bay City, Michigan — in his lawsuit filed Wednesday.

Pane's banquet hall and home were destroyed in November 2003, when three neighboring buildings were imploded to make room for the Holland Performing Arts Center.

The lawsuit claims the city was negligent by approving the plan to clear the old Swanson building with explosives and failure to properly supervise its contractors.

City attorney Paul Kratz said the city acted properly and was not negligent.

In January 2003, Pane filed a claim for $10 million from the city for losses suffered.

Kratz said the city has made no payments on that claim.

PRISON CALLS

OMAHA — People in custody at the Douglas County Jail still get one free telephone call when they are arrested.

But because of a scam by some, all inmates now will have to pay for any other dialing, including to their attorneys.

Some inmates had been making telephone calls at no charge to friends and relatives by claiming to make free calls to their lawyers, then manipulating a feature in the Qwest voice mail system to redirect the calls to friends and family, Jail Director Bob Houston said.

Inmates pay $1.80 for 15-minute personal calls. The same rate now applies to attorney calls.

School evacuated after bomb threat

SECOND SCHOOL

IN A WEEK TO EVACUATE

DUE TO THREAT

LINDA GARCIA

Hastings Tribune

St. Cecilia Middle School and High School were evacuated Thursday morning for about two hours after a bomb threat was found written on a wall in the school.

No bomb was found, but the threat was explicit enough that Principal Marie Butler informed police and the Rev. Jim Meysenburg, superintendent of Hastings Catholic Schools.

Butler said students and teachers handled the situation well.

The threat was discovered by students at about 10:15 a.m., Butler said.

"First of all, some students came to my office and reported that some disturbing graffiti was on the wall in the bathroom," she said.

The Hastings Police Department investigated, said Police Capt. Gene Boner.

"It was a fairly specific threat, and the school decided to evacuate," he said.

The school evacuated to the basement classroom area of Mary Lanning Memorial Hospital, where hospital staff passed out decks of cards for students to use during the wait.

About 380 students and staff went to the hospital, crossing Seventh Street to get there.

Butler said the students and staff were great during the evacuation.

After police checked out both the high school building and gymnasium building across the street, students were allowed to go back to the school, about two hours later.

Butler said middle school students went to lunch, where a detective talked to them about the incident. High school students went to the gym, where the detective also talked to them about the incident, reassuring students that the buildings were safe and how serious the issue was.

The threat mentioned a specific time that the bomb was to go off. At that time, Butler said, students were taken to St. Cecilia's Church for a special Mass.

After Mass, students were given a letter from Meysenburg explaining the day to their parents, she said.

A few students, who were either upset or already ill, went home. And a stress debriefing room was available with a Mary Lanning staff member on hand to talk to students who wanted to talk.

This is the second bomb threat in as many weeks to evacuate a Hastings school. Last week, a threat written on a bathroom wall caused the evacuation of Hastings Middle School. On the same day, a report of a gun at Hastings Senior High School caused all eight Hastings public schools to be locked down.

Boner said one of the downsides to the press conference last week was the possibility of a copycat threat.

Bomb threats are not to be taken lightly, he said.

"It places a lot of stress on schools and staff and police. It does strain our resources," he said. "We have to treat each one on its own merit. We'll always err on the side of caution."

Boner said the student or students who made the threat will face severe penalties.

"It's not a game; it's not a joke," he said. "As they're caught, they will be dealt with. We will request the county attorney to prosecute to the fullest extent because of the stress it places on parents and students."

GROUP SAYS NEBRASKA HAS GREAT

Wind power potential

Staff and wire

LINCOLN — It's time Nebraska caught wind of the power-generating capacity of wind, a legislative committee was told Thursday.

According to the American Wind Energy Association, Nebraska is ranked sixth nationally for energy potential from wind power.

But to date there are just 12 wind turbines operating in the state, while nearby states including Kansas, Iowa and Minnesota have hundreds of turbines in operation.

About 150 Hastings residents subscribe to wind power, which Hastings Utilities purchases from Kimball. City officials have said they would consider building a turbine if about 2,000 customers showed interest in purchasing wind power.

Omaha Sen. Don Preister, who has advocated wind energy for years, told the Natural Resources Committee that he believes the Legislature should direct the state's public power companies to produce a certain portion of electricity from renewable energy, including wind power.

After the hearing, Preister said he planned to introduce a bill in January that would require 10 percent of the power generated in the state be from renewable sources. Currently about 1 percent of the total power generated in Nebraska comes from wind energy, he said.

People support renewable energy, Preister said. He cited a survey by the Nebraska Public Power District that found 96 percent of its customers believed that having at least 200 megawatts of wind energy in the state was a good idea.

Nebraska's turbines in Lincoln, Springview, Valley and Kimball currently generate about 14 megawatts of power.

A new 60-megawatt wind turbine farm is being constructed near Ainsworth. The wind farm is expected to have 36, 1.65 megawatt wind turbines. One megawatt is considered enough electricity to power 200 average metropolitan homes.

"I don't know of anybody who thinks we should do less in the area of energy efficiency," Preister said.

Minnesota, ranked ninth in the nation for wind power potential, has turbines producing 450 megawatts of energy, which provides power to about 150,000 homes.

Dan Juhl, owner of wind energy development company DanMar and Associates of Pipestone, Minn., told the committee that construction of turbines helps the local economy and is a cash crop for farmers who put them on their land.

Wind can't be the sole source of power, Juhl said, but it definitely can be part of the mix.

Electricity from wind amounts to less than 1 percent of all the power generated in the United States. Industry leaders believe it could generate up to 20 percent of energy needs. Windy states like Nebraska and its neighbors in the Great Plains are viewed as the center of such potential energy production.

Services Monday for slain Marine

ALBION — Funeral services are scheduled for Monday at St. Michael's Catholic Church for a soldier killed in Iraq.

Army 1st Lt. Edward Iwan, 28, of Albion was killed Nov. 12 when a grenade struck his vehicle in Fallujah, military officials said.

Community officials have asked residents to line the funeral procession in honor of Iwan.

Iwan joined the Army right after graduating in 1994 from Albion High School, which is now Boone Central High School.

After three years in the service he came out to complete his college degree in criminal justice at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

In December 2001, Iwan went back into the Army.

Baby named after soldier

The Associated Press

OMAHA — The widow of Lance Cpl. Shane Kielion, who gave birth to the couple's first child just hours before her husband was killed in action in Iraq, was "doing as well as to be expected under the pressure," Kielion her father, Don Armstrong, said.

April Kielion named the baby Shane Kielion Jr., after his father, Armstrong said. Donations to help the family can be sent to the Shane Kielion Trust through Wells Fargo banks, Armstrong said.

Some impatient over one-way street issue

COUNCIL DEBATES NEED FOR CONSULTANT ON PROJECT

LINDA GARCIA

Hastings Tribune

Local business owners and Hastings City Council members may be getting impatient to see downtown streets converted from one-way to two-way.

But to do it right, the city needs to pay to have a traffic study conducted first, the council heard during a work session Wednesday.

The council discussed three proposals received on converting the downtown streets from one-way to two-way.

City Engineer Dave Wacker said requests for proposals were sent to four companies, but just three responded by Tuesday's deadline. The fourth company, JEO of Hastings, sent a letter saying it wouldn't submit a proposal. The proposals were for three phases of work. The first phase would include traffic counts, configuration analysis, and intersection analysis.

Phase 2 would be to choose a method and design the plan to convert the streets. Phase 3 would be the process of converting streets.

The least expensive quote came from Olsson Associates of Lincoln, with a bid of $23,400 for Phase 1 and $43,000 for Phase 2. On-call oversight of Phase 3 would be provided as needed.

The other bids came from Schemmer and Associates and Kirkham Michael, both of Lincoln.

Schemmer and Associates bid $79,731 for Phase 1, variable rates for Phase 2, and $90 per hour for Phase 3.

Kirkham Michael submitted bids of $58,000 for Phase 1; $64,000 for Phase 2; and for Phase 3, $136 per hour for signal timing and $85 per hour for construction inspection.

Council hears update on airport track

LINDA GARCIA

Hastings Tribune

If Hastings wants to see a test track at the Hastings Municipal Airport, it's time to get on the ball, track developer George Anderson told the Hastings City Council at a work session Wednesday.

Anderson showed some photographs and concept drawings for Motorsport Park Hastings, which would be incorporated around the west and southwest portion of the airport.

The city is in the process of updating the Airport Layout Plan, which will need to be approved by the Federal Aviation Administration. Plans for the track will be included with the ALP, as any kind of nontraditional airport use needs FAA approval, also. Anderson already has been working to find out about airport requirements, like staying a certain distance from runways and other equipment, and he has designs for a 2.1-mile track that winds around the runways on the west and southwest side of the airport. The track includes 17 turns and is on average 12 feet wide — up to 50 feet wide near the Terminal Building.

He also plans to develop support at the airport for the test track, which would be designed for high-performance cars like Cobras and Porsches.

The support includes a hotel with garage, service buildings for Anderson's dealership and other businesses, and a show-case building at the old Terminal Building where cars for each event can be displayed. But the main reason for the presentation was to remind the council that zoning regulations will need to be changed to allow for such a use.

Surveyors will start working at the airport next week, and Anderson expects to have his plan included in the Airport Layout Plan when it's submitted, probably in January.

Still, he said, the FAA is not likely to approve the idea if the zoning is not appropriate.

"I'm here to ask that we really have to rock to get this in January," he said. "I don't think you're going to be able to submit it to the FAA without knowing about the zoning."

Adams County and Hastings have no zoning for tracks of any kind, said Tamara Babcock, city development services director.

MUSEUM SEASON

KICKOFF

The Hastings Museum of Natural and Cultural History will kick off the holiday season Saturday with the opening of "Tis the Season" in the J.M. McDonald Planetarium along with the Festival of Christmas Trees.

"Tis the Season," which became an instant hit in November 1994, demonstrates why the time of year called the holiday season was celebrated long before the birth of Jesus Christ and how those ancient traditions have been incorporated into modern celebrations.

The sky show runs daily at 2:30 p.m. and 4 p.m. through Jan. 6, 2005, and is free with a paid museum admission or museum membership.

The celebration continues with the opening of the 22nd Annual Festival of Christmas Trees. Over 40 groups, including Scouts, 4-H clubs, civic organizations and craft clubs, are registered to participate in the ceremonial decorating tradition, which is attracting new groups every year. Visitors can view the trees through Jan. 1, 2005, with regular museum admission or museum membership.

One-way: Study irks some council members

The tentative plan is to convert the north-south streets between First Street and Seventh Street and from Lincoln Avenue to Minnesota Avenue to two-way traffic. Downtown business owners also would like to see Third Street converted to two-way.

As the council members looked over the proposals, though, they were concerned about the cost for studies they didn't think were necessary. They also were concerned that spending money for the studies wouldn't lead to the desired results, and that the issue would continue to stall out.

Members suggested that the studies weren't necessary and that city staff could simply make the conversions, since the proposal to change the streets already has the support of downtown businesses.

But Wacker said the city would be liable for any accidents that resulted from such a traffic flow change.

"You need a detailed analysis to do this objectively," he said. "You don't just start taking out traffic lights without raising liability. If you don't have an engineering study to back your decision, the city is liable in case of accidents."

Wacker recommended that the city accept the low bid, start working with the company, and decide on Phase 2 once the studies have been completed.

Council members still were frustrated at the idea of having to pay for a study, but Wacker said he wasn't qualified to do such a traffic study.

Added Babcock: "This kind of work is highly technical and highly specialized. You're going to have to buy that expertise."

With the Olsson plan, some of the data will be collected using city staff, saving money on the final contract.

Phase 1 is scheduled to be completed by March 2005, so conversion could begin as early as June.

The council will discuss the issue again at Monday's meeting.

Track: Zoning must be changed

The zoning change would have to go through the City Planning Commission before being approved by the City Council. The public can have input during the process.

Anderson also would need to apply for a conditional use permit for certain events.

But he said he didn't expect the track to cause many problems for neighbors.

He has plans for a 15-foot-high sight and sound screen, or fence, along 12th Street. Other sound screens could be added as needed, as long as they match airport requirements.

All the cars will have mufflers, and will have to meet strict guidelines as to decibel levels. Anderson said a car running at a California track was black-flagged or asked to leave for exceeding the decibel limit by one decibel.

The most exciting thing about the track is the development it will bring to the airport, said Anderson and Dee Haussler, executive director of the Hastings Economic Development Corp.

"You look at it and say, holy mackerel, why haven't we done something? Well, part of it is because who wants to be by an airport?" Anderson said.

The improvements, like the hotel and other businesses, should generate dollars for the community.

Investors have been excited about the opportunity. Haussler estimates there will be about $10-$15 million invested in the buildings alone.

"The few people we've visited with, they are very interested in the project because it would be a destination-type of thing," Haussler said.

The council will discuss a resolution of support for Anderson's track project at Monday's meeting. The council meets at 7 p.m. at the City Building, 220 N. Hastings Ave.
